FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

FAYETTE COUNTY MILLENNIALS ARE BADLY NEEDED TO PARTICIPATE IN REGIONAL PLANNING EFFORT AS DEADLINE NEARS

Fayette County, Georgia, December 8, 2014– If you are a Fayette County resident born between 1978 and 2000, the Fayette County Board of Commissioners is asking you to participate on an elite Millennials Advisory Committee to give important input and feedback on planning efforts related to the future of metropolitan Atlanta.

Millennials represent a critical and unique voice that Atlanta Regional Commission (ARC) wants to include in its regional planning efforts. To engage this important group, ARC is recruiting Millennials from throughout the region for its Millennial Advisory Committee. The advisory committee will meet with ARC's board and regional elected officials to provide input on regional policy decisions. They will also advise ARC on community engagement strategies for involving new voices in ARC's planning efforts.

"I would truly like to see some of our Fayette County citizens in their 20's and 30's, participate on this committee and promote the values that have produced our high quality of life," said Commission Chairman Steve Brown. "I would especially like to see our married citizens in that demographic and those with children represented on the committee because there are so few of them participating."

The time commitment for participating on the committee is minimal, consisting of no more than a couple of meetings a month. The deadline to sign up for this influential committee is December 19.
